CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

THERE is a strong movement in Colorado to restore capital punishment to the statute books.

The annals of crime show that the price set on human life in that state is small indeed, and the indifference shown to the fate of the murderer by the average citizen, except where the crime is particularly atrocious or is brought home to him by personal interest, is astonishing.

The murderer feels that he is safe from the gallows. The fear of death is not a deterrent in Colorado.

More than this, it is the feeling there that a few years sentence in jail is the sole result of a killing. The people are now agitating for a change that will afford some protection from the man who will kill if he feels that there is no fear of the death penalty.

There are features here in common with the Colorado phase of this important matter. We have capital punishment but in this quarter of the territory there has been, until the last few weeks, an immunity from hanging and the murderer has escaped with a few years in Yuma.

This dangerous state of things is now a thing of the past, and crimes of an atrocious nature will now meet with its just punishment.

It is an important fact that imprisonment alone with all the prospects of life and freedom is but little obstacle to the crime of murder. Hence, however, it may appear contrary to the rule of progress and the advance of civilization it is an unhappy necessity that capital punishment must remain on the statute books and be carried into effect where the safety of the community requires its protecting influence.

IMPORTANT DECISION.

THE decision of C. M. Wellborn, U. S. circuit judge of the district of Southern California, at Fresno, this week in the case of Lee Blasingame vs. U. S. is of importance to the people of Cocconino county. The decision sets forth that the act of congress creating forest reserves is unconstitutional in that it delegates to the Secretary of the Interior legislative power.

The Globe Times says it is astonishing how many men there are in Gila county over sixty years old. The late poll tax acts does age men rapidly. If it holds out two years longer the rising generation will be already "riz" and every kid with a mustache as big as a Chinaman's eyebrow will be walking with a cane.

THERE are 141 theological schools in the United States, 52 law schools, 92 regular medical schools, 9 electric medical schools and 14 homeopathic.

Forfeiture Notice.
